- "B" Benefits: Creating positive feelings or relief to a customer

Conditional Negotiation (Impulse Negotiation)

If I – Will You ? Close Approach

Offer additional discount which is not part of offer but can be provided if they closes the deal immediately. It makes prospect feel like they won.

Tactic	Example
Promise	I will lower the price if you - Are ready to buy
Threat	I will walk out of this meeting if you will not agree with me
Recommendation	If you lower your price, my friends will also buy
Punishment	I refuse to listen to your screaming. I will leave if you continue
Commitment	I commit to deliver 100 units by June15 if you order now.

Conditional Negotiation (Impulse Negotiation)

- One Should not exploit but find a Win-Win opportunity
- Needs Patient Listening.
- Example, Car Dealers and Sales Representatives
  - Multiple Financing Options | Customized Features |
  - Extended Warranty | Free Accessories | Additional Free Services and Maintenance | Easy Exchange

Middle One Approach

- Have three options to recommend customers, each at a different price point
- Start with the most expensive one because this will be significantly more expensive than the other two options but don't spend a lot of time here, but do mention how wonderful it is, Say it is probably a bit too much for the customer.
- Go to the cheapest one and Say you will not recommend this, for example as most people find it does not have enough features.
- Spend time on the middle one and the price of this should be closer to the cheaper option than the most expensive one. Talk about how this is the most popular model, how it has many useful features.
- Example - This is our premium product. Our most popular version is this one. It has many useful features and I think will work best for you.

How it works?

- Starting with the expensive option has a priming effect, anchoring the customer's mind on a high price. Recommending not to buy this helps build trust
- Switching to the cheap option triggers relief at a more affordable product,
- Middle-priced product then becomes the natural choice. It has enough features and seems a good choice, especially compared with the other two options.

Contrast Principle

If a customer finds an item expensive, show him an expensive item first his mind will work in comparison
